

Lewisburg Printing Company

On Monday, September 25, the Addison Economic Development team, accompanied by the Mayor, visited Lewisburg Printing Company (LPC), a commercial printing firm operating out of a 55,000-square-foot facility in Addison. The building, previously owned by AJ Bart Printing, became part of LPC's assets after its acquisition of AJ Bart in 2014.

Founded in 1898 as a newspaper printing company in Tennessee, LPC has since evolved into a versatile commercial printing business. The Addison facility specializes in producing small to medium volume orders, with a wide range of products including cardboard signs, boxes, brochures, and plastic advertisements. LPC's cutting-edge printers can print on various surfaces such as wood, plastic, and paper, allowing the company to offer highly flexible printing solutions.

With approximately 50 employees, this facility can handle orders as small as one sample or as large as thousands, with larger production orders managed by their Tennessee locations. The visit provided an opportunity for the town to connect with an established industry leader in Addison's growing business community.
